Health and Beauty

Some of our leading doctors have come to the conclusion that the much - talked - about tranquilizing drugs are robbing Americans of the tension, alertness, worry and fear which traditionally sharpened their ability to defend themselves in times of danger. These are the signs which possibly lurk in the unscientific use of the "happiness pills," say two psychiatrists who have observed 8,200 people taking tranquilizers.

These doctors tell us that although the pills themselves are not at fault and are potentially of great use in medicine, there is evidence they can cause undesirable effects which constitute danger to both the individual and to society.

Among the 8,200 people studied, the following dangers were observed:

1. Danger to the health and even the lives of persons who react "abnormally" to the drugs.

2. Danger to the patient's philosophy of morals and emotions.

3. Danger to the physician and to medicine generally because doctors are being subjected to enormous pressure to prescribe the pills.

4. Danger to society because it is being led to believe that no one ever should have to be afraid or feel anxiety.

It seems that about 80 of the 8,200 became depressed enough to attempt suicide. Many of the others developed types of mania which required more serious treatment and hospitalization. At least 400 of the group suffered these reactions.

Another group of 120 felt so good after taking the pills that they failed to follow up with other medical measures and became much worse than before.

Doctors are in favor of tightening up on the use of the drugs. They suggest a more thorough examination of patients before the pills are prescribed. A move is needed to have drug manufacturers initiate public education campaigns about tranquilizers, along the lines of those staged by some state liquor agencies as to the effects of alcohol.

Pedestrian Deaths Increase

Richmond, Va.- Colonel C. W. Woodson, Jr., Superintendent of State Police and Chairman of the Governor's Highway Safety Committee, today expressed alarm and concern over the abrupt upswing in Virginia's pedestrian deaths.

Noting that the 152 pedestrian deaths of 1955 marked the lowest toll in the state's history but that the trend started upward with 168 deaths in 1956, Colonel Woodson listed 20 such deaths for January, 1957, which compared badly with the five of January, 1956.

Contrary to general belief, he pointed out that an incomplete study of January records indicate definitely that in the great majority of cases, the pedestrian who is struck is either performing an illegal act, as crossing in mid-block, or an unsafe one, as crossing without allowing a safe margin between oncoming cars.

"National estimates," he said, "place nine out of 10 pedestrians who are killed as not licensed to drive which indicates a lack of appreciation as to the dangerous potentialities of an automobile and the limitations placed on the driver. At the top legal speed of 55, a driver needs at least 220 feet in which to stop after he sees danger and is moving at 81 feet per second."

Colonel Woodson further pointed out that most of the January victims were persons of advanced age who were killed attempting to cross a highway in darkness. Generally, no, or slight, fault was assigned in the official reports.

The safety official felt that all pedestrian warnings could be boiled down into the admonitions that it is suicidally foolish for a walker to dispute right of way with an automobile; that people should walk where the driver expects them to walk; and that they should always leave a big margin for safety.

At the same time, he asked drivers not only to refrain from illegal acts but actually to lean over backwards in protecting those afoot. "The pedestrian has the right of way unless he is walking illegally and, even then, it is the driver's legal responsibility to make very reasonable effort to avoid hitting him," he concluded.

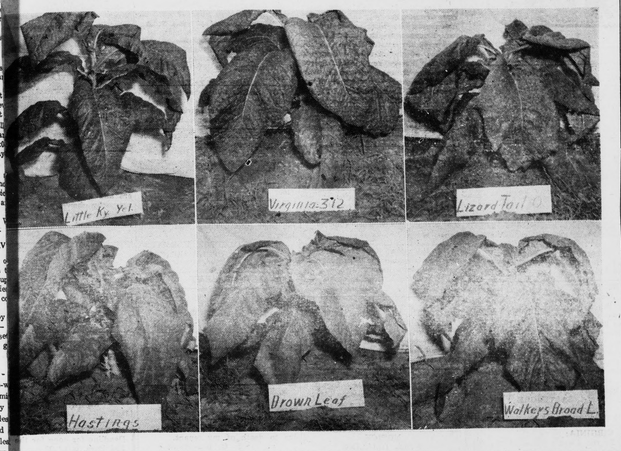
Recommended List of Darkleaf Tobacco Seeds



Tobacco growers are asking what variety should I plant next year? The market for several years has been seeking a Brown or Dark leaf. How long will this demand continue? Soil type will determine to some extent the color and texture of the cured leaf and the method of curing will have an effect on the color.

Some of the varieties pictured are not recommended for 1957. Kentucky Yellow is no longer recommended because of inferior yields per acre. Characteristics and results of experiments are summarized below.

KENTUCKY YELLOW- 1956 - On 5 locations in 1956, yielded an average of 1916 lbs. per acre, value $376. per acre. Carries the lowest yielding and lowest dollar value of any of the varieties tested in 1956. Description characteristic: Easy curing, leaf is ribbed and veining, little or no mottling or speckling. Undesirable characteristics: Poor resistance to root rot, large leaf size, cures a mahogany dark color which is not demanded by the present market.

VIRGINIA 312 - On 5 locations in 1956, yielded average of 1916 lbs. per acre, a value of $1089 per acre. Carries the following characteristics: Carries a high resistance to root rot, large leaf size, easy curing, predominantly dark color. Undesirable characteristics: Poor resistance to storm damage, a very brittle tobacco.

LIZARD TAIL ORINOCO - In 1956, averaged at 5 locations 1740 lbs per acre valued at $864. Over a 4-year period it has averaged 1549 lbs, valued at $647. Desirable characteristics: Cured predominantly brown leaf, as desired by today's market. Undesirable characteristics: Growers reported it is a little more difficult to cure than other varieties, a heavy suckering variety, poor resistance to root rot.

HASTINGS: In 1956, averages at 5 locations, 1710 lbs, per acre value at $1865. The 4-year average of 1528 lbs, per acre was valued at $688. Desirable characteristics: a very easy tobacco to cure. Undesirable characteristics: Very poor resistance to root rot, and cures with a predominantly dark color.

BROWN LEAF: 1956 averages on 5 locations, 1883 lbs per acre, valued at $1047. Four-year average, 1606 lbs per ache at $794. Desirable characteristics: An easy curing variety ubually brown in color. Carries a great deal of width or fiber between the veins. Undesirable characteristics: Results have yet to determine its resistance to root rot conditions in many soils of Appomattox County.

WALKER'S BROAD LEAF - 1956 averages on 5 locations, 1788 lbs, per acre valued at $957. The 4-year average is 1624 lbs, the per acre value, $756. Desirable characteristics: It has fair to good resistance to root rot, easy to cure and usually is a predominantly red color. Undesirable characteristics: On some soils, may grow too large for easy handling and quality leaf.

Clings to the road like a stripe of paint!

The '57 Chevy can give lessons on taking curves and holding the road to just about any car going. Few cars at any price are so beautifully balanced and so smooth, sure and solid in action.

A car has to have a special kind of build and balance to keep curves under control. And nobody outdoes Chevrolet in that department! It "corners" with all the solid assurance of an honest-to-goodness sports car. Chevy doesn't throw its weight around on turns because it carries its pounds in the right places.

And if the road should turn upward, Chevy can take care of that nicely, too—with up to 245 h.p.*

Come on in and take a turn at the wheel of a new Chevrolet.
